The Europa-Kolleg Hamburg offers two visiting fellowships, both for three months, at the Institute for European Integration as of now or as soon as possible. During their stay research fellows are free to work on their own research agenda in the field of European integration. They are expected to present their research in a research seminar and produce a paper to be published in the institute's discussion paper series or in an external journal. Furthermore, the visiting fellows will be required to be engaged in organizing one of the two following scientific conferences:

The future of the transatlantic relations

European history and identity – critical approaches to self-conceptions of the EU as a political community

The Institute for European Integration is an academic institution at the University of Hamburg and enjoys the constitutional freedom of research and teaching. It has the task of instigating and conducting interdisciplinary research in the area of European integration as well as integration processes in other regions of the world.

The Institute is in search for post-doc researchers who are in the process of building up their academic career within the scientific community. The fellowships are open for political scientists, lawyers, historians, cultural scientists, sociologists and economists likewise. The determining factors are a research agenda in the field of European integration issues and excellent English language skills.

We offer a fellowship of 2,200 Euros per month and cover travel costs both ways. Visiting fellows may opt to lease an on-campus apartment for the duration of their visit. Applications must contain a CV and a concise description of the research project (up to five pages in English) to be conducted during the stay at the Institute for European Integration and should be sent in a single .pdf-file via email until the 21st of January 2018 to:
